The President's Newsletter

Hi everyone, it is amazing that all of the carnival glass contributors have found time between raindrops to box up some nice glass for our September 2009 Convention Auction. First was last years supporter, Helen Fowler, a wheelchair widow, who with her son assisted me gather, list and box 30 pieces of carnival. Second was myself, who boxed up two large containers with 80 items of glass from my collection and items that I was able to win on the internet to bring some different and colorful items for the auction; and third was Tina Katsikas, who while working 12 hours a day, 7 days a week selling fireworks, found the time to go through her glass and pack five banana boxes for me to pick up 41 nice pieces, and next, was Paul Berube who trekked two banana boxes, 36 lots of his glass from

Rhode Island to my home in the White Mountains of New Hampshire, and on the next day, Tom Burns (left) pulled into my yard with his "WHITE WHALE" of a truck carrying two more banana boxes containing 31 lots of carnival glass. And so it goes that I shall photo all of the glass for our website, as well as for our records and Staples gal Nancy to copy into the Auction Flyer that will need to be mailed out to all who may wish to mail bid, phone bid or bid in person at the Four Points Sheraton Motel in Leominster, MA along with our membership.

It will not be long before the August 16th NECGA meeting in Southbridge, MA where we shall be working out the details of things to do, including deciding on our banquet meal, personnel to work with Tom during the auction, tracking conventioners who need to register for the convention under NECGA so that we can attain the necessary attendees to meet our quota for reduced costs, etc. I have already put aside some items for the clubs mini auction, and hopefully others will do the same. We have some great glass and now we need to spread the word to get the support that will bring success which advertising alone will not accomplish. So be chatty and let the good times flow. On that subject, I shall make a presentation at the meeting, so please make plans to attend and tote some "NEW FINDS" to the meeting for Show & Tell. See you there,

Moe Myers, President

SONGBIRD TUMBLER by Bob Smith

This very pretty rich marigold tumbler comes to us out of India. Although it has all the characteristics of your typical Jain tumbler, this is the product of one of several carnival glass manufacturers that are spread around India. Molded into the base of this glass are the large capital letters "B.M". This stood for B.M. Glass Works which was located in Firozabad – the same city in which the Jain Glass Works, Ltd. was located.

A word here about the tendency of collectors to label all Indian carnival glass as being made by Jain Glass. There were at least seven other companies that made carnival glass and can be traced and that many again that cannot be located at this time. Indian glass companies were no different than those in the USA and other countries. When other Indian glass companies saw that Jain iridescent glass was becoming popular, they too jumped on the bandwagon.

The principal design on the tumbler is repeated twice. There is a bird perched on the top of a berry laden tree branch with elongated leaves against a background of thin raised lines. Above this is a row of small circles below a band of interlocking diamonds.

The glass was made from a two part mold. Its measurements are: 4 5/8" high; a 2 3/4" rim; and a 1 7/8" wide base. There are a few of these known in the USA and Australia at the moment, so they should be considered very scarce if not rare.

Happy Hunting!

KNOWING THE DIFFERENCE

Recently while scanning E-bay, I noted a vase up for bidding which was identified as Pulled Loop by Dugan in Marigold. As I viewed the vase, it immediately became apparent that it was not Pulled Loop, nor was it a vase by Dugan. The photos were somewhat dark and out of focus, but I was able to see that it was a vase made by Millersburg in the pattern known as Tulip Scroll, as pictured here. And it should be evident that the vase that I bid on and won arrived in a color different than Marigold. Yes, it is a radium finished Amethyst vase. The value increased, as did the reason we have "Show & Tell" at our Club Meetings, so that various patterns and makers become more evident to our members.
